

Project Crossovers

Wednesday 10th April

Today, I went along on another visit to a residential home because those visits are always memorable and make my day! There's a lovely lady there called Diana, who used to play the piano and drums before her arthritic hands stopped her. She and her husband are there every week without fail, eager for the singing to begin, and she will always join in with the bongos or the tambourine as well as singing. She's such a pretty lady with sparkling blue eyes and a halo of soft white hair, and she wouldn't miss the sessions for the world! She told us "I really look forward to Wednesdays all week and won't let anything else happen on that day". Isn't that great? What a lovely feeling to be told that we're so wanted and appreciated!

And then there was Sid, who said "this is the best thing that happens all week". It's so lovely to hear such great things. It makes you realise that just little things bring such a lot of joy to people. Do you wonder why I love it?
